Annual Meeting May 27th

Konter to Hand Over JEA Reins to Scott Samuels

On Wednesday, May 27, Scott Samuels will be named the new president of the JEA at the Annual Meeting. Scott succeeds Marcy Konter, who has served as the JEA’s president for the past two years. The 2009-2010 JEA board will be installed at the meeting and this year’s Harvey Rubin winner will be announced, too. Other special recognition awards also will be presented.

Marcy Konter had the following to say about her two year tenure as president:

“Serving as JEA President over the last two years has been quite an experience. Though often challenging, and occasionally trying, there is tremendous satisfaction in being so intimately involved in such an important and far reaching communal organization like the JEA.

The sheer number of people served each month at the facility is remarkable. While the officers and board members grapple with many important decisions about the JEA finances and policies, it is far and away the work of the director and his staff that makes everything happen every day at our center. Hats off to Adam Solender and each member of his team who make sure that the programs we enjoy, the activities in which we participate, and the total facility are always prepared and ready for each member.

Very often we remind ourselves of our shortcomings: too few donations to fund so many communal needs. I choose, instead to think of our many successes. Community Shabbaton events, hosting community wide events for entertainment, education, Israeli culture, health awareness, and so much more make the JEA a true center for community Jewish life in Savannah.

I am proud to have played a small roll in JEA history for this past two years.”

All members of the JEA are invited and asked to attend the Annual Meeting which will be held in the JEA auditorium on May 27th at 7 p.m. The meeting will include a dessert reception.

Motorcyclists will raise thousands for local Holocaust library

Are You Born to be Wild?

Even just a little bit? Join the Jewish Motorcyclists Alliance (JMA) when they come to Savannah this month for their annual Ride to Remember. Even if you don’t ride, come show some of our famous Southern hospitality and your support for the more than 250 Jewish motorcyclists from around the country, and places as far away as Australia, Israel and the frozen tundra of Canada, who will be visiting Savannah May 14-16 as the home base for their ride on May 15th from here to Charleston and back.

This will be JMA’s fifth Ride to Remember, all of which are fundraising projects for Holocaust remembrance causes and other Jewish philanthropies. This year, they are donating the proceeds of their ride to projects in Savannah and Charleston and the ride is expected to raise thousands of dollars for our planned Holocaust educator’s lending library. Their previous rides have benefited the Paper Clips project in Whitwell, Tennessee, Magen David Adom and the National Holocaust Endowment Fund.

The riders will be arriving on Thursday, May 14th and the DeSoto Hilton Hotel downtown will be their main base of operations. They’re planning a cook-out in Madison Square next to the hotel on Thursday at 6:00 pm and everyone’s invited – $5 per person donation requested to cover costs.

The main event takes place Friday morning, May 15th at the JEA.

My parents and brother recently visited me for a few days here in Savannah during Passover so they could briefly see my experiences living here. Besides the wonderful weather we had, they were amazed by the beautiful city, the rich and extensive history, and most importantly by the thriving and growing Jewish community. Everyone they met was so warm and welcoming, and as always I felt so lucky to be able to be here now with you all.

It suddenly struck me that this was the first time ever I am celebrating all of the Jewish and Israeli holidays outside of Israel! Sometimes I get confused with the second day of Passover. Not to mention the fact that here in Savannah we have so many beautiful winter days outside of Israel! Sometimes I feel like family.

Dear Savannah Jewish News,

In Savannah, some things happen quickly, some take a little longer (note the nickname “Slovenawn”). The lesson to be learned is to embrace change when it does occur, and accept that other changes may not be realized as soon as we may desire.

I have found that lesson especially valuable in my Jewish communal volunteer life. Wonderful techno-changes have taken place here at the JEA with the introduction of weekly E-News, electronic donation capabilities, and the beautifully enhanced and informative Savannah Jewish News. We’ve changed dramatically how we reach out to our community thanks to Adam Solender, and the number of people on the receiving end has grown by leaps and bounds. We are better connected to our Center and our total Jewish community.

I have also learned the importance of being a patient when change happens slowly. We have an active and vibrant Center that has been showing signs of its age – renovations, re-pairs, and remodeling are difficult to fund in today’s difficult economic times. We ask a lot of our community, and somehow, slowly but surely we manage to find a way to accomplish much of what is needed, though not necessarily all that is wanted.

Participating in volunteer work is always satisfying, particularly when it is for a group or organization that holds special meaning. My time as JEA President has been challenging but always rewarding, time consuming but always worthwhile, and most of all fulfilling. I may not have been able to execute all the changes I would have liked, but I saw the agency serve the needs of children and adults, both young and seasoned. I have watched our members enjoy Shabbos together, celebrate Purim as a community, and live and learn Jewishly in a beautiful and friendly Jewish community home.

Best,
Marcy Koster

Dear Savannah Jewish News,

Sometimes perfect moments are created by amazing people who come together to help others that they do not know. On Sunday, March 29th, the Cancer Answer Free Health Fair and luncheon produced such heroes.

MorningStar Cultural Arts Group and the Savannah Jewish Federation’s Jewish Family Services hosted a free lunchton to young women under 25 with their parents to learn how to prevent cervical cancer and a health fair to anyone who wanted free screenings and information about preventing and dealing with genetic (BRCA gene) cancers (prostate, ovarian, male & female breast, and colorectal) at the Jewish Educational Alliance. Chaired by Toby Hollenberg, the fair was the culmination of a series of free events that started in January to inform people in Savannah about early diagnosis and better yet, prevention, of certain cancers.

We wish to thank the JEA, SJF and all the MorningStar volunteers, health care professionals and the institutions that gave so freely of their time and expertise to produce the Cancer Answer Health series. In particular, we wish to thank the administrators and staff of the Nancy N. and J. Lewis Cancer & Research Pavilion, the Curtis and Elizabeth Anderson Cancer Institute, the American Cancer Society and Hadasah who worked together to provide an incredible array of free services and information for those in attendance.

Free oral and skin cancer screenings were provided by Dr. Harold A. Black and Dr. Adam S. Pritzer. The lectures by Dr. Steven T. Brewer, Dr. Venus Jolly Nabors, Dr. Barry Luskey, Dr. Ray Rudolph, and Dr. James J. Burke, II, as well as segments of presentations by genetic consultant C. Shai Hufferd-King, nutritionist Peter Brodhead, cancer advocate Barbara Hoffman, J.D., editor of A Cancer Survivor’s Almanac, Nancy H. Johnson, cancer care administrator and Katy Keyes cancer fitness specialist were filmed and will be available on the April community access channel along with a special message from actress Kathy Bates, an ovarian cancer survivor. Check local Comcast listings or the MorningStar website for the air dates and times.

Sincerely,
Carol Tovah Greenberg

Dear Jewish Educational Alliance,

On behalf of the people serve by America’s Second Harvest Food Bank of Coastal Georgia, we would like to convey our sincere gratitude for your donation of 983 pounds of food collected during Kids Day. Your gift ensures that lives continue to be nourished by Second Harvest.

For each dollar contributed to America’s Second Harvest of Coastal Georgia, we are able to bring five pounds of food into our distribution center and distribute it throughout our twenty-one county service area with the assistance of our partner agencies. Our partners include local faith-based organizations with food pantries, soup kitchens, and shelters from domestic violence and homelessness as well as local chapters of large organizations like the American Red Cross and the Salvation Army.

Last year through our member agencies and our direct programs — Brown Bag for the Elderly, Community Kitchen, Kids’ Cafe, Mobile Food Pantry, and Rural Delivery — we distributed more than 5.4 million pounds of food throughout southeast Georgia. By providing nonperishable food and necessary items to local non-profits, we saved them more than seven million dollars wholesale. This money, which would have been spent on food, was used instead on shelter, medical supplies, counseling and other support necessities for at-risk children, mothers and families.

Your gift sustains the food bank’s mission to nourish our community through food, education, and empowerment. Thank you for your support.

With sincere appreciation,
Mary Jane Crouch

Persistence of Memory

First, some background information: I evaluate people with memory problems for a living. Just about every day for the last quarter century I have seen patients with memory difficulty. So tonight, as Carol reminded me just in the nick of time that I have once again nearly forgotten to count the Omer, I am reflecting on the power of memory. (Understand that the counting is currently in single digits and we are very nearly at my record for counting without mistakes.)

As we move through April and May, we are challenged to remember a lot. At the Seder we recall the story of Israel’s bondage and the Exodus. Yom HaShoah bids us remember the Holocaust. Yom HaAtzmaut brings back the memory of Israel’s independence and the wars fought since then to maintain her security. Finally on Shavuot we relive the commandments as relevant today as they were in millennia past. We must never permit another Holocaust to happen to Israel. People or any other people – be they Jews or Armenians, Bosnian Muslims or African tribesman. We must remember that the dream of freedom and peace which led to Israel’s establishment lives not just in Israel but in the hearts of other peoples in other lands. As Jews, we must help our fellow Jews, it’s true. But we also need to look beyond ourselves and see how remembering our history can help us find ways to live in our present and fulfill our obligations to improve our world now and in the future.

Who knows? I might make it all the way through the Omer. Miracles do happen, but that’s a different column.

A Jewish homeland is not just a historic entity but a political reality. While we draw strength from our collective memory, the purpose of these lessons is to help us live in the present. We are taught to live in the moment.

As we each approach the holidays and memorials of the next few weeks, it is important to jog our memories and recall the lessons of history. It is even more important to use the opportunity to act in the present in order to remember that Pesach’s promise of freedom is a reality for us but not for others. The words of the commandments are as relevant today as they were in millennia past. We must never permit another Holocaust to happen to any people – be they Jews or Armenians, Bosnian Muslims or African tribesman. We must remember that the dream of freedom and peace which led to Israel’s establishment lives not just in Israel but in the hearts of other peoples in other lands. As Jews, we must help our fellow Jews, it’s true. But we also need to look beyond ourselves and see how remembering our history can help us find ways to live in our present and fulfill our obligations to improve our world now and in the future.

Who knows? I might make it all the way through the Omer. Miracles do happen, but that’s a different column.

A Job Well Done

Marcy Konter is retiring this month. No, Konter Homes will not be without their “Customer Service Director.” Marcy is retiring after two years as President of the Jewish Educational Alliance.

Marcy’s presidency began with the challenge of hiring a new Executive Director (I think she made a great choice), and transitioning the entire organization with new personnel. She has overseen the building of new locker rooms and the outdoor pool, guided wonderful Shabbatonsim, Kid’s Days and hundreds of other activities. Over the past one and a half years I have watched Marcy guide the organization with great insight, dogged determination, grace and class. She has adeptly balanced the needs of the organization with the needs of the membership and community — no easy task.

At a recent JEA Board of Directors meeting (her last as President), Marcy spoke with great passion about the JEA and what it stands for in the community:

• The JEA is central to the community we serve.
• We are the place where people interact, gather to discuss issues, support each other, stay healthy, learn and relax. Whether it is the Community Shabbaton, Purim Carnival, Jewish Film Festival, or Yom HaShoah observance, the JEA is the facility and home for everyone in the community.
• We add value to people’s lives by offering free and low-cost classes, enrichment activities, gathering places, and the opportunity to be part of a larger community.
• We focus on wellness — of mind, body and spirit — especially important during stressful times. We promote emotional and physical health.
• We foster camaraderie in a safe place, where all are welcome and accepted. We cherish our members and value their participation, support and partnership. We are committed to be here for them when they need us.
• We do not turn people away who are faced with economic hardship.
• We enable our members to participate in programs that support those most in need in our community, through donation drives for food and clothing, sponsorship of Kids Day for the entire Savannah community, and the provision of low-cost/free meeting space to dozens of nonprofits in Savannah.

A friend of mine once said that a Jewish organizational leader’s primary job is to maintain the institution and to pass the organization on from one generation to the next. Always with a smile on her face and with boundless energy, Marcy has accomplished that and so much more. On behalf of the entire community, “Thank you Marcy for all the work you did.”
Golfing for Green

By Carol Towbin Greenberg

A current polarizing political discussion in America is exactly what makes an American – who shall have rights and access to our social services and who cannot. As Jews our history is filled with examples of being the object of laws that treated us as less than full citizens. But this debate is not new to our Jewish or even American history as it seems each generation produces some American citizens whose basic rights and liberties have been denied.

On Thursday May 21, 2009 at 7:15pm at the JEA, MorningStar Cultural Arts group will be proud to present nationally recognized freelance television journalist and independent documentary filmmaker Mimi Gan to lead a discussion after the showing of her mini-documentary With Honors Denied, the story of a Japanese-American woman's journey of redemption and reconciliation after World War II. The film, narrated by George Takai, screened at a dozen film festivals, including Tribeca and Palm Springs International, receiving two audience awards and a jury award for best documentary.

Ms. Gan’s appearance, the Savannah premier, and the teen workshop which will precede it, completes MorningStar’s twentieth programming year and will be the sixth and final event in their Finding Oneself series that started last February with Ethiopian-Israeli filmmaker Avishai Mekonen. Whereas Avishai spoke of preserving racial, religious, and cultural identification through connecting with one’s past, Ms. Gan will deal with racial profiling and the pain of inequality in America from a different perspective – that of the Japanese-American’s placed in internment camps during World War II.

This event is preceded by a youth workshop, designed for people ages 12 to 20 and their adult guests, at which participants may meet, talk, and dine with Ms. Gan (4 p.m. until 5:30 p.m.) at the Frank Callen’s Boys and Girls Club. Both programs are free and open to the public through the generous support of the Georgia Council of the Arts and the City of Savannah Department of Cultural Affairs with added support from the JEA, Savannah Entrepreneurial Center, Savannah Movie Tours, and MorningStar board member Lisa Horn. Transportation leaving from the JEA for the youth workshop can be arranged in advance by calling Larry Dane Kellogg at the JEA (355.8111).

The youth workshop is free of charge but requires pre-registration by clicking the Finding Oneself icon at www.morningstararts.com or by calling 912.652.3582 (Savannah Entrepreneurial Center). Ms. Gan is developing a new teaching guide for West Coast schools and will use her research for the film to help teenagers discuss issues of racial profiling, bigotry, and triumph over adversity.

The riders will begin assembling between 8 and 8:30 am. Please join the Savannah Jewish Federation as we host them for breakfast and a proper send-off before they “head out on the highway” at 9:30 am for Charleston. We need volunteers to help put out the traditional spread – bagels, shmears, coffee and more. Please contact Ben Kweiskin if you’d like to help out (355-8111 or ben@savj.org) or please just come join the excitement that morning and help send them on a safe journey before you head off to work or out on the rest of your day.

All local motorcycle enthusiasts are invited to join the JMA on this Ride to Remember. If you ride and would like to join this fun-loving group but have not already registered, please go to their website, www.ride2remember.com for registration information.

And even if you don’t ride, let’s give them a proper Southern welcome and thank you for choosing Savannah as a place to visit and our future Holocaust library as the beneficiary of this year’s ride!
Embracing the Light from the Shadows:
an Interview with Local Author Jonathan Rabb

Novelist and academic Dr. Jonathan Rabb, a Savannah resident and JEA member, will be speaking at the JEA Tuesday, June 3rd at 7:00 pm. He will give a reading followed by a discussion and Q&A on his new murder-mystery, Shadow and Light (Orion, April 2009) the second novel in a planned trilogy set in Germany between the World Wars. Jonathan will have his historical fiction novels available for sale and for signing at the event. In mid-April, SJF Programming Associate Benjamin Kweskin interviewed him in anticipation of this upcoming program.

Q: What brought you to Savannah from New York City?
A: My wife’s brother Richard Reeve and his family live here. It was beautiful, easygoing, and friendly, so we decided to stay. We’ve been here since July. My wife, Andra Reeve and I have 4 ½ year old twins, and we’re members of the JEA and looking forward to having the pool open this summer.

Q: Shadow and Light is your second novel in your trilogy about Germany in between both World Wars. Why not create a longer series?
A: It had been discussed, but in the end since I chart the decline and despair of Berlin through the main character and his family, it didn’t seem very necessary to me. My characters don’t know that the Nazis will come to power, but my readers do.

Q: What will the third novel in the trilogy be about?
A: It starts in Germany in 1936 before the Summer Olympics, later turning to Spain directly before the Spanish Civil War. It was a great time as far as politics and political upheaval, mass culture, and anarchy.

Q: Your previous book (the first one of the trilogy) is entitled Rosa, about the famous Jewish-Socialist leader, who was very influential in the early 20th century. What is her legacy with regards to Jewish intellectuals in this century?
A: For many Jewish socialists during this time, it was the intellectual approach to politics. To a large extent, it still is. A question to ask is: why were so many Jews Socialists? Both Jews and Socialists desire to create “heaven on earth.” It’s about making this world perfect. Rosa grew up in a traditional home, but even though she didn’t practice Judaism, one may still see Judaism and Jewish values through her literature.

Q: What are the differing aspects that draw you to this particular time period?
A: For me, Berlin itself is a character; the city was in an identity crisis of sorts. Also, the great Jewish German-Polish Socialist leader Rosa Luxemburg is a fascinating person. She was the dominant figure of Socialism and tried to rally Germany to revolution.

Q: What other time periods or locations do you find intriguing to write about?
A: Ancient Christianity, Venice, Italy in general, and Ireland. I still find Germany fascinating.

Q: Would you classify your literature as Jewish?
A: My works clearly have Jewish content through many differing aspects, but I would not consider my literature to be Jewish, per se. Cultural aspects are inevitable, especially when talking about 20th century Germany. German Jews brought Reform Judaism as well as assimilation. Of course, German Jews also fought on the side of Germany in World War One. German Jews died fighting for Germany in the First World War.

Q: Your perspective on writing differs significantly from High School English teachers’ approaches, doesn’t it?
A: I have a general sense for what I see the book looking like; the structure is already in my head. I don’t generally have a blue print written out because I need that active discovery. I put a lot of faith in the subconscious mind, meaning the brain will lead me to the right place. The main questions I ask are “how can I capture the feelings of my characters?” “How do I remain consistent in this?” Also, I trust my audience and their intelligence.

Reeves Attends National Young Leadership Conference

By Amanda Reeves

I was fortunate to represent Savannah at the United Jewish Communities Young Leadership conference in New Orleans March 15th through 17th. This year’s theme: “tikkuNOLAm” focused on the rebirth and rebuilding on New Orleans – three and a half years after Hurricane Katrina ravaged the city. This year’s theme of service and giving back drew a crowd of 600 people from all over the country.

UJC partnered with St. Bernard Parish to help renovate the remains of Archbishop Hannan High School into a state-of-the-art youth complex. Located fifteen minutes outside of the heart of New Orleans, St. Bernard’s Parish was devastated by Hurricane Katrina. The eye of the storm passed over the area, destroying its levees and flooding nearly every home and building in the parish, and leaving eight feet of standing water.

Archbishop Hannan High School decided to relocate and what remains are damaged buildings and overrun athletic fields. We spent an entire day working on transforming the former school into the new Hannan Youth Complex. This included painting, landscaping, laying pipes, repairing fences, and much more. Although this was just the beginning of a long term project, to see our efforts at the end of the day was inspiring.

At the conference we also heard speakers such as Scott Cowen, the president of Tulane University, and Rabbi Uri Topolosky of Congregation Beth Israel of New Orleans. In addition, we listened to testimonials from members of the Jewish community - all of these speakers were consistent in their theme: Jewish Federations’ support of those in need came quickly and was distributed efficiently when they needed it most. I always read the Savannah Jewish News section “Your Federation Dollars at Work” and hearing the stories about rebuilding and assisting the community in New Orleans really put these words in a new light. Even more, the Jewish community was the model for the greater New Orleans community.

Yet, members of the Jewish community also spoke about how hard it was for them to accept tzaddik when they are used to giving. This is something I had not thought about and it made me think about giving in a new perspective.

Listening to stories about rebuilding and the spirit of the city reminded me of similarities between New Orleans and Savannah. Although larger in size, the New Orleans Jewish community resembles our own community. Our roots are both southern and Jewish and we both boast communities that are hundreds of years old. While we have been fortunate not to have experienced a tragedy like Hurricane Katrina – being located in a hurricane prone area is also unfortunately another similarity between our two beautiful cities. Listening to the hurricane victims throughout the conference hammered home the importance of being prepared. As we approach hurricane season this year, I urge all of us to think through what we would do in case of an emergency and to actually take part in the hurricane readiness measures that many have become desensitized to over the years.

Editor’s Note: Amanda Reeves, a local realtor with Melaver Mouchet, has been one of the key members of the Young Jewish Savannah steering committee for the past year, has advised the Federation’s Long Range Jewish Education Committee and is a BBYO advisor. She attended the National Young Leadership Conference with a grant from the Savannah Jewish Federation. She and her husband, Josh, moved “back” to Savannah in 2006.

May 7th—Kazablan - An adaptation of a popular Israeli stage musical. Kazablan is an army veteran turned gang leader in the Israeli port of Jaffa who masks his feelings of bitterness with a lot of bravado. He’s sweet on Rachel, a young woman who lives with her father and stepmother. The budding relationship scandalizes the neighbors (not to mention Rachel's parents) and infuriates Yanush, a middle-aged shoe store owner who wants Rachel for himself. (Yanush feels he’s entitled to marry Rachel since they’re both Ashkenazi Jews of Eastern European origins, whereas Kazablan is a Sephardic Jew from Morocco.) The neighborhood has something else to worry about besides the antics of Kazablan and his gang: the city wants to tear down their crumbling homes. The residents pool their resources to save their houses, but the money that’s collected is stolen. When he’s jailed for the theft, Kazablan must find a way to clear himself.

May 21st—Jellyfish—Three very different women live in modern Tel Aviv, Israel. Batya, a catering waitress, takes in a child apparently abandoned at a local beach. Batya is one of the servers at the wedding reception of Keren, a bride who breaks her leg escaping a locked toilet stall, ruining her chance at a dream Caribbean honeymoon. And attending the event with an employer is Joy, a non-Hebrew speaking domestic worker who has guilty left her son behind in her native Philippines. As this distaff trio separately wends their way through Israel’s most cosmopolitan city, they struggle with issues of communication, affection and destiny—but at times find uneasy refuge in its tranquil seas.

Mickve Israel Honors two Women of Valor

By Jane Kahn

Mickve Israel Sisterhood this year will honor two of its long-standing members as Women of Valor. Matiel Roos Leffler and Clara Gershon Levy, close friends whose career tracks in Mickve Israel have paralleled, will be recognized at a catered dinner at 6:30 p.m. Thursday, June 4, in the Mordecai Sheftall Hall. Their service to Mickve Israel Sisterhood each has spanned some 60 years.

The pair can trace their first association to 1945 at a party in Atlanta for Clara when she made her debut, "so to speak" at the Ansley Hotel, and Matiel was a guest ... they think! Their weddings were at Mickve Israel (they married friends, who were fishing buddies); their children, (three Lefflers, four Levys) were confirmed at Mickve Israel. Martin Leffler and Henry Levy each was Parnas (President) of Congregation Mickve Israel (and therefore, Matiel and Clara had tremendous responsibilities for annual meetings and receptions through their tenures.)

Both ladies were presidents of Mickve Israel Sisterhood (but are hard-pressed to remember who was first.). In those days, in highly organized structure, the Sisterhood president was required to spend years rising in the ranks through several vice presidencies and board positions. They figured sixteen years, at a minimum. Matiel and Clara were owners of the retail Name Place, predecessor to Let’s Party.

Together, they expanded a newly launched Sisterhood Judaica Shop, into what has evolved into a fund raiser for the Congregation, not to mention the attraction for tourists. And since its inception 20 years ago they have sold tickets, counted money, cooked, baked and served at the Jewish Food Festival. In recent years, Matiel has continued Martin’s project of Challah baking and Clara has inaugurated the Bauble Booth of gently recycled and redesigned jewels.

But, these Women of Valor have also traveled different routes at times.

Matiel, a graduate of Savannah High School, attended the University of Georgia, where she was responsible for the reorganization of her sorority, Sigma Delta Tau. She returned to Savannah in 1946 to marry Martin, home from service in the U.S. Army Infantry. She has seven grandchildren, three great grandchildren, with a fourth due this summer.

In addition to Sisterhood activities, Matiel has been chair-man of the Women’s Division of the Federation campaign, a board member of both the SJF and the JEA. She was president of the Savannah chapter, National Council of Jewish Women, representing that group in 1967 at a solidarity meeting in Washington during the Six Day War. She also served on the organizational board of Goodwill Industries, Chatham-Savannah Mental Health, Hospice, Senior Citizens and the MI Archives committee.

As a child, Clara moved to the New York area and graduated from New Rochelle High School. She attended Miami University in Oxford, OH, where she was a member of Alpha Epsilon Phi sorority. She has five grandchildren.

Clara has served on the board of the Congregation, on the Southeast board of Temple Sisterhoods, and once again is a member of the MI Sisterhood Board. She was a two-term president of the Savannah Jaycettes, board member of Parent and Child Development, a member of the NCJW and the Savannah Symphony Women’s Guild. A flower arranger of note, for years she helped decorate Mickve Israel’s elaborate Sukkah, as well as countless table decorations for countless functions.

Tickets for the banquet are $30. For reservations, phone Mai Friedman 598-1663.

Rabbi Yaakov Rosenstein

“The four ways to know God”

Rabbi Rosenstein visits the offices of some of the most powerful CEO’s in the country to discuss Torah, ethics, and life with his program “Have Torah, will Travel.” Founder of “Torah One on One,” the Conservative-born Rabbi has been able to reach professionals from the Pittsburgh-area and beyond attain a working relationship with God, stating, “I’m a personal friend, a personal educator, somebody who can really try to relate to them and be there for them. I can develop their own personal exploration curriculum to help them achieve their personal and spiritual interests. The bottom line is that we want people to be successful and to lead purposeful and meaningful and ethical lives. They have these perceptions that I will try to convert them or missionize them or try to push them to become more religious. And that is not the case.”
Savannah Native Attends Opening of Sderot Playground

By Lauren Gordon Mescon
Co-President, JNF Southeast

I am Rosalyn (z’l) and Bobby Gordon’s (z’l) daughter. I may be a 53-year-old wife, mother and professional, but I will forever be their child.

For those who did not know my dad, he was the quintessential volunteer and one who successfully bridged the gap between institutions, serving as president of both the JEAC and the BB Jacob Synagogue.

What I learned from growing up with parents who lived the concept of “tikun olam” is that the true measure of one’s worth comes from what she or he does for others.

It took me a long time to find my philanthropic calling in this world, but I guess seeing blue boxes at my Grandma Flo’s house for as long as I remember from my earliest childhood finally took. My grandmother started collecting the pennies that resulted in JNF (first formed in 1901) having ownership today of 13 percent of the land in Israel.

I recently returned from a 10-day trip to Israel, a JNF mission where I had the privilege of attending the grand opening of the JNF Indoor Playground in Sderot. It is the largest indoor playground in Israel, made of reinforced concrete and steel, ensuring that the children of Sderot finally have a safe place to play. Before, they had only 15 seconds to get to safety when sirens went off warning of an incoming missile. Wow, to be proud of a playground that doubles as a bomb shelter is sobering. But I am proud that this building was completed in record time—eight months, a feat in any country, especially Israel. Eighty-three percent of all monies raised for JNF go directly to Israel. I saw firsthand the incredible impact of those dollars.

The gift of the playground that we gave the children and families of Sderot was quite impressive: The former factory now houses play areas for toddlers and teens, therapy rooms, a movie room, an indoor soccer field, a computer room, and lots more. The gift that I got in return however, far surpassed theirs.

At the playground opening, the speeches of the dignitaries were all but drowned out by the laughter and shouts of the children playing inside. For the first time in eight years, mothers could relax, knowing their children were safe. The words of a 12-year-old-girl who grew up in Sderot brought the crowd to tears. She told us what a great place Sderot was to live, thanked us for the playground and then told us “Nothing can break us...we’re here to stay”.

There is a film and television school in Sderot. Sapir College exists because of the vision of school headmaster Avner Faingulernt, who wanted to bring life to Sderot. The school opened in 2000 with 40 students. Today it serves 400 students from all over Israel. Against all odds, Faingulernt wanted to open a school of visual arts in the most neglected, forgotten area in Israel. Not only does Sapir offer degrees in cinema, television, animation and scoring, school officials began an international film festival last year. The hope is that one day festival organizers can show the films in both Sderot and Gaza City.

What struck me was the belief in a better future shared by so many in Sderot.

I went to Israel with a group from JNF to see our projects and open the playground. I went feeling bewildered and frustrated that world opinion and even our own people continue to blame Israel for all of the ills that the extremist Hamas leadership has brought upon the Palestinians. I went not understanding why it seems to be okay in 2009 to be anti-Semitic. I am still unclear as to why world opinion is the way it is and why anti-Semitism is on the rise. I am very clear however on one thing after this trip: Israel is here to stay. It is our home, it is here for all of us, and it is being nurtured and cared for by heroes. We owe an immeasurable debt to the brave citizens of Sderot who stand firm everyday despite the risk of rockets, despite the code reds that give them only 15 seconds to reach a safe place.

I am also thankful that Roz and Bobby instilled in me a love for Israel. I am thankful that Flo pushed those blue boxes and I am thankful that I am a part of JNF and that through this organization, even I can make a difference in Israel.

On the Personal Side

MISCELLANY: The Clinical Social Work Association of Savannah recently honored Dr. Julius “Boo” Hornstein at its 23rd Annual Professional Conference held this past March by renaming it the “Julius Hornstein Professional Conference.” The conference brings outstanding leaders to train social workers and others in enhanced techniques of service delivery to clients and patients in the area of mental health. Dr. Hornstein is a pioneer in the fields of community based services to the mentally challenged and reeducation of emotionally disturbed children. A noted community activist, he has served on many boards throughout his career and also is considered an expert in Savannah Jazz history. Dr. Hornstein recently retired as Professor Emeritus in Social Sciences at Saint Leo University and continues to teach at the Undergraduate and Graduate levels at Savannah State University as well as maintaining a private clinical counseling practice... Tufts University Trustee Deb Jospin (daughter of Sam and Sara) will receive this year’s Light on the Hill Award in April, in recognition of her continued impact on the Tufts community. Deb is on the Tufts Board of Trustees and was part of President Obama’s transition team. This annual award is the highest honor the student body bestows on Tufts alumni. She was director of Americorps between 1997 and 2001 and currently heads a consulting firm called sagawa/jospin, which advises nonprofits, corporations, and foundations.

SPORTS: Fayfe Kirschner and Christine Addy won their age groups in the Crimestoppers 5K (3.1 miles) Run in Savannah.

An Invitation to Come See the Real Rambam Day School!

As the allocations process comes to a close for the Savannah Jewish Federation, I find myself reflecting on the whole idea that Rambam is a recipient of community funding. On behalf of the entire Rambam family; the board of directors, the students, the parents and the staff, thank you for your efforts on our behalf. I often wonder how many people really know the school. I hear the various ideas that float around about the school. Every institution must expect criticisms and in Rambam’s situation, also be privy to others’ ideas of what would make Rambam more “community” or just better in general. However, I still can’t help but wonder about the opinions of individuals who have never come and visited the school.

Very often, those who have accepted to serve on the education committee have come to the school for a visit. Interestingly, they learn a lot about an institution they came to realize they didn’t really know much about. In fact, what they learned instilled within them a whole new perspective and respect for the school. I urge and encourage the community to come and see what really goes on in Rambam. I urge the community to come and see an excellent secular program. I encourage the community to come and see how the children embrace their Judaic studies. I encourage the community to come and see the enthusiasm the students have for their school. I encourage the community to come and see the dedication of the staff. I encourage the community to become educated about the efforts of the board of directors and the parent body to insure the vitality of the school. I encourage the community to come and learn how decisions are made to balance the sensitivity needed by every student because of their various Jewish backgrounds. I am confident that half of what is heard outside of Rambam is not true, and half of what is never heard would be significant information.

Rambam is an integral link in the chain of our people’s survival. Every Jewish child deserves to know about their Jewish history and their Jewish heritage. It is our responsibility as parents and grandparents to see that this privilege is a reality.
What’s New with Young Jewish Savannah?

Started in the summer of 2008, Young Jewish Savannah has been busy this past year building community for young Jewish professionals, 21-40, in the greater Savannah area. Reaching out to over 200 young adults from Bluffton to Brunswick, YJS has held a number of programs, including a Sand Gnats baseball outing, a “Pizza in the Hut” Sukkah party, various happy hours, bowling and more.

YJS seeks to provide ways for young Jewish professionals and families to get to know each other through a variety of programs including social events, community service (tikkun olam), and leadership opportunities.

There is already a Facebook Group (Young Jewish Savannah) and very soon there will be a website dedicated to upcoming events and local happenings related to the Jewish community. They have an active steering committee half of whom are native Savannahians, while the others have recently moved to Savannah. They are:

Matthew Allen, a Real Estate Agent with Keller Williams; David Eichholz, a personal injury and workers compensation attorney with the Eichholz law firm; Miriam & Jake Hodosh, who co-founded New Moon of Savannah, a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promotes social entrepreneurship and environmental awareness through a social venture that promote
