Israel under fire: Stop the sirens

Ronit Sherwin, CEO of the Jewish Federation of San Antonio, expresses her gratitude to all the members of the San Antonio community who have contributed to help those Israelis who were impacted by the recent barrage of rocket fire. Thank you for your support of Israel. We are stronger together. The funds collected have been sent immediately to care for homebound elderly and disabled adults during this time of terror, respite for tens of thousands of children fleeing rocket attacks, crisis counseling for Israelis who are overwhelmed by anxiety and in need of relief, and needs that have developed.

To contribute to the Campaign send a donation to the Jewish Federation of San Antonio, 12500 N.W. Military Highway, Suite 200, San Antonio, Texas 78231 or online at www.jfsatx.org.

The Presbyterians and the Jews

Recent votes and actions of a national Presbyterian body, PC-USA, have revealed a distinctly anti-Jewish strain among some factions of the Presbyterian Church.

By a narrow margin, PC-USA voted at its recent meeting in Detroit to divest from three companies whose equipment is used by Israel in the West Bank. (Although PC-USA purports to not support the BDS [Boycott, Divestment and Sanctions] Movement, by selecting divestment they have followed a central plank of the BDS movement.)

Of equal concern has been the publication and sale of Zionism Unsettled by a committee of PC-USA. It contains quotes such as Zionism is “a false theology….a doctrine that fosters both political and theological injustice.”

JCPA President Rabbi Steve Gutow, has stated that the document is “worthy of a hate group, not a prominent American church.” Additionally, he described the Presbyterian congregational resource, Zionism Unsettled, as “an affront to Jews, Israel, peacemaking, and truth telling.”

“Zionism is the belief that the Jewish people should have a national existence in our homeland.”

In early July, Lauren Stanley, Susan Kariv and I represented San Antonio on a Jewish Federations of North America mission to Greece and Israel. Lauren is a co-chair of our Israel and Overseas Committee and Susan is our new Chief Development Officer.

The mission planners could not have imagined the matzav (the Hebrew word for “situation” which has come to embody the ongoing struggle in Israel against terrorism) we would encounter. I invite you to visit our Facebook page (www.facebook.com/JFSATX) to see photos of the mission. Though far from a spontaneous visit, we were in Israel while it was under full attack from Hamas.

Our group included one-hundred-and-twenty professionals and volunteers who are doing through their Federations just what we’re trying to do through ours - connecting local communities with the global Jewish people.

These are a few of the experiences of the mission that Jewish San Antonians should note:

Greece is still reeling from the economic crisis of 2011. High unemployment and the rise of extremist parties on the right and left have stretched the already overburdened organized Jewish community. They are vulnerable and fearful of the too-familiar trends they’re witnessing.

We met with Minos Moises, the president of the Athens Jewish community. His message to North American Jews was simple: “With your help, we feel more protected.”

We visited the Athens Jewish Community School, with approximately one-hundred-fifty students, whose board chair told us “We firmly believe that our existence is directly linked to the future of the Jewish community. Thank you (JFNA and local Federations) for treating this proud community with dignity.”

We met with other Athenian Jewish volunteers whose work is being supported directly by our collective gifts through Federation to the Joint Distribution Committee.

I was part of a six-person delegation that met with the prime minister of Greece for a briefing on the country’s experience of anti-Semitism. Prime Minister Antonis C. Samaras is a close ally of Israel, recognizing that both countries are Mediterranean democracies dependent on each other.

From Athens we traveled to Thessaloniki, which was once fifty-percent Jewish, but saw 87% of its Jewish population murdered in the Holocaust. Today Thessaloniki is a city of one million, with approximately one-thousand Jews. We visited the Jewish summer camp, described by the local Jewish leader David Saltio as “the pride of the Jewish community,” and Thessaloniki’s mayor, Iannis Boutaris, who told our group that “the city has remorse” in reference to the tragic impact of the Holocaust.

From a once-thriving and now-struggling Jewish community in Greece, we flew to the largest Jewish city in the world: Tel Aviv. There we visited participants and staff from the Center for Independent Living, one of six such centers in Israel to assist individuals with physical, mental and emotional disabilities. (By comparison, the US has one-thousand centers). We were in Tel Aviv amidst rockets and air raid sirens, at moments when the centers...

A Night of Celebration

GMJSS celebrates past, looks to future

Golden Manor Jewish Senior Services is so proud and thankful for the support we received on June 7 for our Celebration event. The evening was quite a success – filled with some great conversations and an amazing show that had the sold out theater all in laughter.

Guests were treated to a red carpet experience - with beautifully laid carpets courtesy of Alan Petlin Gourmet Floors. Before entering the house, pictures were taken and printed on the spot.

Other photographers mingled with the crowd and snapped pictures of guests as they shmoozed. Photos are available for viewing on our website - www.GoldenManor.net.

An array of delicious hors d’oeuvres were served prior to the show, and desserts were available during intermission.

The wonderful performance of Funny Girl starring Carlye Gossen as Fanny Brice highlighted the evening and captured the audience with beautiful songs, intricate set designs, and costumes that made the show just right.

Guests were given an exquisite 36 page program book, filled with history and fun facts about Golden Manor, community insights and reflections, and more. To see a copy of the book, call the GMJSS office at (210) 302-6946.

We can’t seem to say enough how thankful we are for the sponsorships, volunteers, support, and everything down to the very last smile, hug, or hand shake that made the evening one that will go down in GMJSS history.

The money raised from the event allows GMJSS to expand our efforts as we continue to serve Jewish seniors in San Antonio. Through transportation, partnerships and direct programming, GMJSS touches the lives of seniors in the area.

need even more help to assist people with disabilities as they cope with the sad realities of Israel’s years in the sights of Hamas rockets from Gaza. While in Tel Aviv we visited Neve Michael, a boarding school for children ages five to eighteen who are severely at-risk and have been removed from their homes. Nearby we met with the director of a new program through the Jewish Agency called Young Communities Doing Social Businesses, which empowers young people to move to economically challenged communities in Israel to develop social business models. The goal is to develop businesses in these areas that are on the periphery and to bring young talent to these areas.

Tel Aviv’s name is a play on the old and the new (a tel is an archaeological mound with layers of history, and aviv means spring and renewal). That is what we saw in our brief time there. Tel Aviv is a bustling center of activity, innovation and entrepreneurship. But at its heart is the Jewish sense of responsibility for each other. Our global Jewish philanthropy supports the kind of creativity we saw firsthand. Not even Hamas rockets could interrupt the spirit of Tel Aviv and its residents’ willingness to do more to help each other and the world.

Like Israelis, though, our group was never far from the reality of the matzav. From Tel Aviv we drove up the Judean Hills into Jerusalem, the eternal capital of the Jewish people. There we met the parents of Gil-ad Shaar (z”l), one of the three young men kidnapped and murdered by terrorists in June. These brave and grieving parents told us “Am Yisrael (the Jewish people) discovered their inner strength (through this tragedy).” A national tragedy was made personal through our conversation with Gil-ad’s parents. In their time of sorrow they were comforted by the presence of Jews from North America.

To get a better sense of how the matzav plays out with Israel’s most vulnerable populations, we heard a panel discussion of “Life Under Fire” with people working and living in the south of Israel. We met a social worker from an absorption center working...
Promoting Unity: Standing as one as a Jewish people

Hinei ma’tov u’ma nayim shevet achim gam yachad – how good it is for all of us to be together.

On July 2, hundreds of San Antonio’s Jewish community gathered to mourn the deaths of Naftali Frenkel, Gil-ad Sha’ar and Eyal Yifrach (z”l), the Israeli teens who were kidnapped and murdered in June. The sense of unity and solidarity was tangible in our sorrow. We do that well. We are here for each other at moments of sadness, lifting others and being uplifted, surrounded by others who value the power of community.

We are one when tragedy strikes. So, why is it so challenging to come together on a typical day? Why is it so hard for us to check our baggage, set aside our politics and personal agendas and come together as one Jewish community without catastrophe?

There are problems enough for the Jewish people without creating more. The organized Jewish community must be in the business of promoting unity, solving problems and inspiring positive motives for connection.

Our San Antonio Jewish community stands as one with our people worldwide. And we ought to pledge ourselves this year to come together more often locally for the purposes of addressing critical issues of learning, affiliation, resource allocation and identity. We can and will do more for the global Jewish people by standing as one every day.

Hinei ma’tov u’ma nayim shevet achim gam yachad – how good it is for all of us to be together.

Please join me and the volunteer and professional leadership of the Jewish Federation of San Antonio in this challenge. Take a seat at the table with everyone in our community and let’s come together for the good of our people today and for generations to come.

Inaugural butterfly painting fundraiser

By Sophia Cathcart, Holocaust Museum Special Programs Manager

Butterflies have long been used to symbolize the innocence and faith of the 1.6 million Jewish children who perished during the Holocaust. But in recent years, this delicate creature has also come to represent hope, resilience, and remembrance to many across the country. It is with this enduring spirit that the Holocaust Memorial Museum of the Jewish Federation of San Antonio announces its inaugural Butterfly Painting Fundraiser on Sunday, September 21st from 5 to 7:30 PM.

Hosted at Pinot’s Palette in Alamo Heights, the evening will include an instructor-led painting of the Butterfly of Hope, a piece commissioned for the Museum and to bites and beverages sponsored by Francine Garza-Vale, a member of the Museum’s Commission. Tickets, available for $40, include their canvas and painting supplies. There will also be a raffle for a gift card to Pinot’s Palette and a stunning piece from the Brave Collection, a line of jewelry hand carved by survivors of the Cambodian genocide.

Proceeds from the ticket sales will go to funding the restoration and preservation of pieces recently acquired from Harry Mazal’s collection. Seating is limited; please call the Museum at (210) 302-6807 or Pinot’s Palette at (210) 832-8004 to reserve your seat! For more information on registration please visit bit.ly/pintospalette.

Perspective: The March

Each spring, thousands of people from around the world join together for the March of the Living, an educational program which includes the history of the Holocaust and the examination of the roots of prejudice, intolerance and hate. The March of the Living itself, a silent walk from Auschwitz to Birkenau, is a tribute to all victims of the Holocaust. San Antonio teen Jacob Schwartz was awarded a grant from Federation’s Foundation for Jewish Philanthropies to participate in the 2014 March of the Living. The essay below is the first of a two-part series about his experience.

15,000 strong, we marched for a mile from Auschwitz to Birkenau. 70 years ago, our ancestors marched along the same path, but they were walking to their deaths; we were walking full of life, joy and spirit. We left right after Pesach, celebrating the exodus from Egypt, which was interesting because we were embarking on a journey that was an exodus of our own: from the ashes of Poland to the peak of Israel. I embarked on the March of the Living with Jewish teens from over 40 countries. Over 7 days, we visited various camps and ghettos throughout Poland to pay tribute to the 6 million who died in the Holocaust and to learn about the atrocities to prevent them from happening again. Standing in what was left of the Warsaw Ghetto, we were told stories of the uprising that took place in that very ghetto, a true testament to the Jewish spirit. After an hour-long bus ride, we arrived at the Radagast train station, a platform used to ship hundreds of thousands of Jews to extermination and work camps. Standing in the back of a preserved cattle car, surrounded by 150 other people, I felt very claustrophobic. I couldn’t help but imagine that the doors would close and we would begin to move, as the Jews of 70 years ago did. Standing next to me was a survivor from Boca, who had spent 5 days in a car similar to the one we were standing in. She was in hysterics. I could not imagine the horrors she had experienced and how difficult it must be to be back in one of those cars.

We visited one of the countless mass graves in Poland. While most headstones have elaborate carvings, dates, tributes, and a list of surviving family, these graves had numbers, which was more still than so many other Jews were given, millions who were denied a proper Jewish burial.

Birkenau was truly unbelievable. No textbook can adequately prepare you for the sheer size of the facility, or the fact that in this single place, over one million people were herded in as less than animals and systematically, brutally murdered. Whole families rode over those railroad tracks, families that would never be whole again. When the Nazis gassed the Jews, they had nowhere to dispose of the ashes, so they dug pits. Some of the pits were filled with water. In these lakes lie the remains of nearly one million innocent human beings. If you look closely enough, you can see bone fragments or little bits of teeth. As we stood around the pond, tears flowing out of our eyes, our leader, Rabbi Meir Tannenbaum of Dallas, opened his mouth to share a story, but no words came out. He simply mouthed, “I can’t” and turned away, sobbing. As he and the rest of us cried, a light rain began to fall. The rain fell not over the whole camp, but simply over the pond. Never have I experienced a more divine presence; it was as if God was shedding a tear with the rest of us. I have never been at a loss to explain my emotions, but this harrowing experience left me literally speechless.

In Auschwitz, the barracks have all been turned into museums. One part of the museum is a book of names, filled with the names of the three million Jews killed in Auschwitz and Birkenau. The pages are about three feet tall, two feet wide and full of name after name after name, front and back. The book is about fifteen feet long on both sides. Never have I seen a better depiction of the number, 6 million. In the book, I found my name. Although I am not related to the “Jacob Schwartz” in that book, it signified to me the fact that all Jews were victims and it truly could have been me. In the gas chambers and crematoriums of Auschwitz, you can see scratch marks on the walls, marks from people trying to claw their way to freedom.

In the forest, 3,000 Jews were rounded up and shot. This number seems minute compared to the six million, but the same drill happened time and time again, city by city. One woman attempted to run from the Nazis, her infant child in her arms. The Nazis caught her and made her watch as they grabbed her child by the foot and smashed his head into a tree repeatedly until he was dead. She was then shot. The brutality and total disregard for human life is inconceivable.

In the forest, 3,000 Jews were rounded up and shot. This number seems minute compared to the six million, but the same drill happened time and time again, city by city. One woman attempted to run from the Nazis, her infant child in her arms. The Nazis caught her and made her watch as they grabbed her child by the foot and smashed his head into a tree repeatedly until he was dead. She was then shot. The brutality and total disregard for human life is inconceivable.

Jews were unloaded from trains many times per day in Treblinka. “Welcome to hell!” the Nazis screamed as the families were taken out of the cattle cars. They were told to undress and march a few hundred feet to the gas chambers where they were all murdered. There are only a few documented survivors of the camp. In that pit lies the ashes of around one million Jews, many of whom were just like us. We received letters from our parents at that moment, telling us how proudly they were of us and how much they loved us. Those letters made me cry, not because they were sad, but because there were so many other children just like me who had parents who loved them, who had ambitions, who had hope, but who had all of that taken from them.

His name is Max and he is a survivor. His family was taken to Majdanek where he watched the gas chambers. How he continues to go back year after year to the very spot where his family was murdered is beyond me, but he represents everything good in the world: hope, life, joy (he never ceased to have grin on his face, even as the rest of us were in tears). He explained a day at Majdanek to us: beatings, selections, tireless work, and death.

When the camps were liberated, the Jewish community began to ponder how to create a monument to commemorate the people who had perished in Majdanek. In the mean time, the ashes from their bodies were being dug up by soldiers. It was decided that they would build a dome and inside it would be the ashes that were recovered: 7 tons! There was 7 tons of human ash recovered. It’s truly baffling to think that the dust is actually what’s left of human beings. Some are given funeral processions and periods of mourning, but they were given a pit.

Standing outside of one of the countless crematoriums, I stood at the chimney. From that chimney rose the smoke from 800,000 bodies, innocent bodies. Standing in the gas chamber, looking up at the hole in the roof, I could not shake the frightening feeling that I would see a canister fall down and we would all stop breathing, like the millions of people from 70 years ago.

To be continued in Sept. issue.

Beldon Library News

The Beldon Library is now accredited by the Association of Jewish Libraries (AJL). The Basic Accreditation was awarded on June 23rd at the 49th annual AJL conference held in Las Vegas, Nevada. The accreditation is in effect for 5 years. The AJL accreditation process entails a comprehensive evaluation of a synagogue, school or center library measured against the highest standards of excellence. Eligibility for accreditation is determined after a thorough review of documentation showing that the library and its staff adhere to the professional standards promoted by AJL.

Summer hours for The Beldon Library are Monday, 12:30 p.m. – 5:30 p.m.; Tuesday, 10:00 a.m. – 12:45 p.m.; and Wednesday, 1:15 p.m. – 3:30 p.m. Stop by, get a library card, and enjoy the library’s great selection of books for all ages.

The Beldon Library is a program of the Jewish Federation of San Antonio.

Literacy Coalition celebrates volunteers

The San Antonio Jewish Coalition for Literacy held an appreciation lunch for its volunteers on June 26 at the home of Dr. Habib and Manijeh Nathan. Nineteen volunteers attended the lunch, and gifts were given to them for their service to San Antonio students during the 2013/2014 school year. Michele Leverant, Chair of the SAJCL, was recognized for her support of the program. Coalition volunteers tutor and mentor students in both public and private San Antonio area schools. They are currently working in elementary and middle school grades.

According to the Coalition’s Coordinator, Nathan Ratner, “Just become a Coalition volunteer for the upcoming 2014/2013 school year and you too can be an honoree at next year’s appreciation lunch! It only takes one hour per week during the regular school year. Adults of all ages can be Coalition volunteers. Currently there are many retirees and seniors who are volunteering at schools through the Coalition, and this has been a very rewarding and enjoyable experience for them. Volunteers are

FROM THE COVER

The document was pulled from sale on the PC-USA website, but it has not been repudiated. Its supporters do not seem to recognize that it is a sloppy and highly inaccurate document.

According to Katherine Henderson, President of Auburn Theological Seminary, it is an ideologically driven document "which purports to be about love, but it actually expresses demonization, distortion and imbalance. Sadly, its sweeping allegations, blanket condemnations and troubling omissions are not likely to foster productive conversations, but rather to prevent them. It creates walls not just between Presbyterians and Jews, Israelis and Palestinians, but also with the Presbyterian body itself."

The document and the divestment vote have been extolled by former Ku Klux Klan leader David Duke. One church leader, Sid Batts, a teaching elder for the Presbytery of Salem, North Carolina, has noted that the commissioners who voted for divestment do not see Jewish self-determination as legitimate and therefore do not see the Jewish people as legitimate.

Many Presbyterians sitting in the pews of local churches seem to be unaware or in disagreement with the actions of their national body, which has seen a steady decrease of its membership over recent years due to defections of its members.

Those Presbyterians who do support divestment and the lies in “Zionism Unsettled” are going to have to come to face the deep contradictions in their own positions before they can purport to be in support of peace. To truly make peace in the Middle East requires knowledge and respect for all the parties involved.

To create peace demands of peace brokers that they not demonize one side of a conflict.

The Jewish community of San Antonio is bolstered by those Presbyterians who have spoken up against divestment and Zionism Unsettled and for peace.
always needed to provide that helping hand for regular students who need just a little boost to improve their academic performance. This is a volunteer activity where you can actually see how you are making a positive difference.”

Those interested in becoming a volunteer for the upcoming school year, should contact Nathan Ratner, the Coalition’s coordinator. Nathan’s office telephone number is (210) 302-6972, and his e-mail address is ratnern@jfsatx.org.

Volunteers tutor and mentor students in both public and private San Antonio area schools.

Chabad to launch 3rd Annual Mezuzah Awareness Campaign

For the third year, Chabad will be sponsoring a Mezuzah Awareness Campaign in San Antonio. The affixing of a Mezuzah on the front door has been widely practiced within the Jewish community. However, unbeknownst to many people, often beautiful Mezuzah cases on front doors do not contain kosher parchment scrolls.

From Sunday, Aug. 10 through Friday, Aug. 22, Chabad will send someone to check the Mezuzah scroll on your front door, and replace it free of charge if it is not kosher (a $35 value). In addition, if you do not yet own a Mezuzah and would like one, Chabad will give you a brand new Mezuzah for the front door of your home.

For more information and to make an appointment, please call Chabad at (210) 764-0300.

The program is sponsored by Dr. Eric and Adah Schaffer in loving memory of Dorothy and Alfred Schaffer.

Kosher BBQ Competition returns to Agudas Achim

Congregation Agudas Achim will host the 2nd annual Kosher BBQ Championship on the synagogue grounds at 16550 Huebner Road, on Sunday Oct. 26 from 11 a.m. - 5 p.m. The event, sponsored by HEB, will benefit the San Antonio Food Bank.

Thirty (30) grill teams will compete for the Kosher BBQ Champ title and a custom designed grand champion belt buckle.

The winner will be chosen by a panel of celebrity judges. A People’s Choice selection will also be awarded.

Biblical references in last year’s team names reflect the fun, casual atmosphere of the Kosher BBQ: The Lost Tribe, Jew C Que, The Golden Calf Grillers, The Kosher Smokers, and the Smoke ‘N’ Hot Red Heifers. Think you have skills? Teams are still being accepted.

A fun family event, the Texas Kosher BBQ Championship will include (to date) live music by Los #3 Dinners and Cool Like Roy.

Event attendees will be able to sample BBQ served from the team pits; and sides and other fixings from the Kowsher Café.

There will also be a Kiddie Korral with games and activities for children; hot dog and pickle eating Contests; Bubbe’s Bazaar with twenty-five (25) vendors selling everything from nuts to jewelry, trinkets and treasures in between; raffles and prizes.

The barbecue honors the memory and legacy of Texas and Southwest philanthropists and ranchers Emma Freeman and her sons Joe and Harry.

The Freeman family were long-time members of Congregation Agudas Achim and longtime lovers of great barbecue.

For more information on team registration, ticket and advance purchase options, visit www.TheTexasKosherBBQChampionship.com.

In the (luggage) bag

NCJW is collecting serviceable used luggage to benefit children in foster care whose belonging are currently being transported in garbage bags.

NCJW learned of this situation as a result of participating in a subcommittee of a statewide Task Force on Foster Care. All of this is an outgrowth of the section’s new Transitions initiative, a program to assist and support young adults aging out of foster care. NCJW will be providing one on one mentoring along with group cultural and educational programs.

“It was at the invitation of BCFS, our partner in the project, that we joined the task force,” said NCJW’s Ruth Wurzburg. When we heard that garbage bags...was the current answer to the packing problem, we knew that our members and supporters could do better.”

If you have luggage that you no longer need and that is still in good condition, take it to the next NCJW Trashy Book Club Meeting on Aug. 21 at the home of Sheryd Jackson or to the NCJW Opening meeting in September. If you will not be at either of these meetings or are not an NCJW member, contact Lee Markman at (210) 525-8785 to arrange for pick up.

JCC welcomes new staff member

Samantha Mazuz has joined the staff of the JCC as Teen/Young Adult Services Coordinator and Hillel Director. Samantha recently moved to the area from New Jersey with her husband Idan, whom she met while living in Israel.

Samantha’s relationship with Israel began over three years ago upon graduating from Rutgers University where she received a phone call from Birthright to go on a trip that January. She quickly packed her bags for a life changing experience to Israel which subsequently became her home for two years where she participated on a Masa internship program, completed a NYU Masters program, and got married.

Upon moving back to the states with the vision of making a difference in her Jewish Community and passing on her love for her homeland, Samantha taught Hebrew school and Sunday Judaica class to 5th graders, 9th grade Hebrew High School, and was involved in Young Leadership throughout the Jewish Community. Samantha has also lead and organized Birthright trips and has spoken at the annual Birthright Gala this past spring in New York City. Samantha and Idan moved to San Antonio this past July.

Samantha’s primary responsibilities at the JCC will be directing Hillel San Antonio as well as developing and implementing programming for teens and young adults in our community.

Rachel Rustin, previous director of Hillel, is transitioning into a new exciting role at the JCC – Director of Jewish Journeys – where she will continue to direct JAS (Judaics After School) at the J as well as work with all JCC departments to create and implement a variety of new Jewish experience initiatives.

“We are looking forward to the new programming options that we will be able to offer as both Rachel and Samantha transition into their new roles at the J, sharing their experiences and love for Judaism and Israel with our community,” said Lauren Ross, JCC COO/Vice President.

Seniors a growing target for financial exploitation

By Ian S. Lovestock

According to the National Conference for State Legislatures, financial crime and exploitation of the elderly can involve the illegal or improper use of a senior citizen’s funds, property or assets, as well as fraud or identity theft perpetrated against aging Americans.

Exact statistics on how frequently financial crimes against the elderly occur are not available as it is widely believed to be underreported by victims. A recent study by a major insurance company estimates the financial loss by victims of elder financial crimes and exploitation in excess of $2.9 billion, annually. Actually, about one in 44 cases of financial abuse is ever reported, almost one in ten financial abuse victims will turn to Medicaid as a direct result of their own monies being stolen from them.

Cognitive impairment and the need for help with activities of daily living make victims more vulnerable to financial abuse. Crime prevention specialists agree that the reason these crimes go unreported is that the victim is frequently embarrassed to report it or they feel a family member may try to assume control of their finances or a fear they will lose their independence.

There are two general categories of financial crimes against the elderly; fraud committed by strangers and financial exploitation by relatives and caregivers. Seniors may be easily targeted because of stereotyping that they are poorly informed, living alone, or potentially suffering from mental deterioration.

The best way to decrease elderly fraud is to educate seniors on the warning signs and indicators of financial crimes. Crime prevention efforts have identified several warning signs and indicators of consumer fraud and financial exploitation. Those with aging parents should discuss the following warnings with them:

• Some warning signs of consumer fraud:
  • Excessive number of magazine subscriptions
  • Checks and bank withdrawals that the elder cannot explain
  • Unsolicited phone calls from marketing companies offering “fantastic” opportunities
  • Lottery and sweepstakes scams
  • Home repair/traveling con artists
  • Grandparent scam: someone claiming to be a friend of your grandchild tells you’re their grandchild is in jail and needs you to send money immediately

• Charity scams
• People claiming they are from a utility or a telephone company needing access to your home
• Roof repair, driveway repair, lawn service: the senior is offered a discount rate or claiming they have left over materials from another job
• Predatory lending
• Annuity sales
• Investment or security schemes
• Internet “phishing”
• Identity theft
• Medicare scams

Some indicators of financial exploitation:
• An acquaintance recently expressed interest in a senior’s finances

- Phone calls or e-mails from a bank, credit card company or a government agency asking for your personal information or soliciting help in a criminal investigation.
- A caregiver or relative has no means of support and is overly interested in the elder’s financial arrangements.
- Checking account and credit card statement are sent to a relative or caregiver and are unexplained or not accessible to the elder.
- Using a Power of Attorney inappropriately.
- Taking advantage of joint bank accounts or credit card accounts.
- Using ATM cards or stealing checks.

- Unscrupulous in-home care providers charging for their services.
- If you or believe you or your parents or grandparents have been a victim of financial crimes, contact banking representatives first to close or change accounts immediately. Then, notify local law enforcement authorities. Crime prevention officers working with the San Antonio Fear Free Environment (SAFFE) units at each sub-station are available to address these issues. Remember, if it is too good to be true – it usually is.

Tisha B’Av

Destruction & Renewal

Tisha B’Av is known as the “saddest day in Jewish history.” While the day recalls general tragedies which have befallen the Jewish people over the ages, the day focuses on commemoration of five events: the destruction of both the First and Second Temple in Jerusalem, the sin of the twelve scouts sent by Moses, who spoke disparagingly about the Promised Land, the razing of Jerusalem following the siege of Jerusalem in 70 CE, and the failure of the Bar Kokhba revolt against the Roman Empire.

Over time, Tisha B’Av has come to be a Jewish day of mourning, not only for these events, but also for later tragedies.

The fast lasts about 25 hours, beginning at sunset on the eve of Tisha B’Av and ends at nightfall the following day.

It is customary to sit on low stools or on the floor while Eicha (The Book of Lamentations) is recited by candlelight.

This year Tisha B’Av begins on Monday night, Aug. 4.

Mincha Services at Rodfei Sholom will be at 7:45 p.m. followed by Maariv at 9 p.m. Eicha (Lamentations) is read during the evening service. Following services there will be a DVD presented by the Chofetz Chaim Heritage Foundation.

On Tuesday morning, Aug. 5, services will be at 6:15 a.m. followed by reading kinot, tragedies that have occurred throughout Jewish history. Each one will be preceded by an explanation. Mincha (services) will be at 7:45 p.m. followed by Maariv (services). The actual fast will end at 9:14 p.m.

The Sheldon Vexler Theatre season kicks off 16th season

The Sheldon Vexler Theatre’s 2014-15 season presents four productions this year including One Flew over the Cuckoo’s Nest (Aug. 23 – Sept. 20), The Trojan Women (Oct. 25 – Nov. 15), Talley’s Folly (Feb. 5 – Mar. 1) and Rumors (May 2 – 31).

Most are familiar with the 1975 film version of Dale Wasserman’s One Flew over the Cuckoo’s Nest featuring Jack Nicholson as McMurphy. The Vex production will feature Artistic Director Ken Frazier in Nicholson’s role, with Tami Kai, Ken’s wife and frequent collaborator, as Nurse Ratched, and their son, Kailyr, as Billy.

Based on Ken Kesey’s novel, the story follows a rebel – McMurphy – who feigns insanity in order to finish his prison sentence in a mental ward rather than on a work farm. There, he discovers the patients of the asylum make a lot more sense than the restrictive and conformist establishment.

Rodfei Book Club to meet Aug. 6

The Rodfei Book Club will meet at Congregation Rodfei Sholom at 7:30 p.m. on Wednesday, Aug. 6, to discuss The Woman Who Defied Kings: The life and Times of Dona Gracie Nasi, by Andree Aelion Brooks.

Born in Lisbon in 1510, Dona Gracie Nasi sojourned in Antwerp and Venice and finally settled in Ferrara where, as a successful and Jewish international banker, she used her wealth and connections to operate an underground railroad that saved, from the Inquisition, many of her fellow Spanish and Portuguese conversos, people who were living secretly as Jews, but who adopted the Catholic church for appearances’ sake.

The Officers, Board of Trustees, Congregation, Auxiliaries, Hazzan Jeremy Lipton and Staff extend a warm welcome to

Rabbi Jeffrey and Lauren Abraham, Benny & Henry

Your arrival marks a truly joyous milestone in our congregation’s 125 year history, and we look forward to an exciting and bright future. May we all go from strength to strength in the months and years ahead!

At Issue: One Tribe One Chief

From 1378-1417, there were two rival popes – one in Rome and one in Avignon – each claiming to be the legitimate pontiff of the Roman Catholic Church.

And from 1921, under the British Mandate, to the present, there have been two chief rabbis of Israel. They are not exactly adversaries, though in the 1970s relations between Rabbi Shlomo Goren and Rabbi Ovadia Yosef became so tense that they did not speak to each other. One chief rabbi represents the Ashkenazi community, whose origins are in eastern and central Europe, and the other represents the Sephardi community, whose origins are in Spain. The differences between Ashkenazi and Sephardi Judaism are a matter of custom and style rather than theology. The siddurim of Ashkenazim and Sephardim phrase and order prayers differently; they sing the liturgy to different nignim; and Sephardim consume beans, corn, peanuts, and rice during Passover, whereas Ashkenazim consider them chametz. The existence of two chief rabbis in Israel testifies not to a schism in Judaism but rather to a demographic divergence.

The Jewish world is not binary. The categories of Ashkenazi and Sephardi do not exhaust the variety of practicing Jews. If Israel were to assign a chief rabbi to each Diasporic division, there would have to be many more than two. Bukharin, Ethiopian (Beta Israel), and Persian Jews are, strictly speaking, neither Ashkenazi nor Sephardi, and each has its own distinctive ways of enacting Jewish identity. And why not a separate chief rabbi, also, for the Bene Israel – the Jews whose ancestors settled in western India many centuries ago? If there is any truth to the old joke that every Jew requires two synagogues, one to attend and one to refuse to attend, then there ought to be 12 million chief rabbis for the 6 million Jews of Israel.

Both the Ashkenazi and Sephardi chief rabbis of Israel are guided by halakha, the body of religious laws embodied in the Torah and its rabbinical commentaries. Both are, in that respect, Orthodox – a flexible term that can apply to Modern Orthodox, Haredim, Hasidim, and others who generally observe the Torah’s 613 mitzvot. Indeed, there is less distance between the categories of Ashkenazi and Sephardi than between Orthodox Ashkenazim and Sephardim and all other versions of Jewish observance – Conservative, Reform, Reconstructionist, etc. Though most affiliated Jews in the United States identify with the Reform movement, the only version of Judaism recognized by the state of Israel is Orthodox. It would be inconceivable at present for a chief rabbi of Israel – Ashkenazi or Sephardi - to be anything else (Since Orthodox seminaries do not ordain women, a female chief rabbi would also be inconceivable). However, the chief rabbis have been granted jurisdiction over important civil matters affecting every Jew in the Jewish State. The Ashkenazi and Sephardi rabbis determine details of marriage, divorce, kashrut, burial, inheritance, and citizenship not only for observant but non-Orthodox Jews, but also for secular and even non-believing Jews as well. Unlike the Catholic Church, Judaism - divided and strengthened by separate denominations - is not hierarchical, and its rabbis are not infallible. The fallibility of even the most exalted rabbis became clear when, shortly after becoming chief Ashkenazi rabbi last year, David Lau chided yeshiva students for wasting their time watching basketball and soccer. Noting that Israeli teams as well as the Europeans they compete against recruit African Americans, he asked: “What does it matter if the Kushites paid by Tel Aviv beat the Kushites paid by Greece?” Kushite, an ancient Hebrew term for black, has come to American slang.

Insisting that Israel recognize the pluralistic reality of the Jewish people, Donnie Hoffman, a Modern Orthodox rabbi and president of the Shalom Hartman Institute in Jerusalem, has called for an end to the stranglehold that the dual chief rabbis exert over Judaism. His prescription is to multiply chief rabbis. “Since the Jewish people don’t agree about Judaism,” he wrote, “the notion of one rabbinate for all Jews ranges between insane and nonsensical and consequently counter to religious pluralism. Five or six chief rabbis sounds just about right.”

A change seems imminent, but instead of expanding the roster of chief rabbis, Israel is poised to reduce their number by 50 percent. “We don’t have two States of Israel,” observed Justice Minister Tzipi Livni. “We’re one nation.” Livni therefore put aside her usual political differences with Religious Affairs Minister Naftali Bennett and Deputy Premier Naftali Bennett and Deputy Premier Naftali Bennett and Deputy Federation mourns the loss of Israeli soldiers

Jewish Federations across North America express our deepest sympathies to the families of Israeli soldiers killed fighting the Iranian-backed Hamas in Gaza over the past few weeks. Along with all of Israel, and the entire Jewish People, we mourn their loss as if they were our own. Among these brave young men were 13 from the Golani Brigade, two of them U.S. citizens: Nissim Sean Carmeli (z”l) from South Padre Island, Texas and Max Steinberg (z”l) from Woodland Hills, California.

Israel’s military operation in Gaza was launched in response to Hamas’ launching of more than 1,800 missile attacks against Israel. It has a singular goal—to eradicate the Iranian-backed terrorist organization’s military infrastructure.

Our deepest sympathies go out to the families of these brave heroes, to all Israelis and to all the mourners of Zion.

Fleeing ‘place full of death,’ Jews from eastern Ukraine weep for homeland

By Cnaan Liphshiz

DNEPROPETROVSK, Ukraine (JTA) — Anatoly Lazaurenko’s face betrays no emotion as he watches footage of an old woman he used to know lying in the rubble of what once was his home in the war-torn city of Slavyansk.

Oblivious to her mangled face, Anatoly, 8, points to a corner of the computer screen to indicate the bombed-out apartment in eastern Ukraine that his family fled in June as a tense standoff between pro-Russian separatists and Ukrainian government forces escalated into urban warfare.

Like many Ukrainians, the boy has become inured to disturbing sights after months of violent conflict in his country. Even after watching the video, Anatoly says he would rather be home — under fire, but with his friends and classmates. But his mother insists they are staying with relatives near Dnepropetrovsk, far from the battle zone, as long as the fighting persists.

“Every day Anatoly asks me in tears if we can go back yet,” says his mother, Ludmila.

The Lazaurenkos are among hundreds of Jews made refugees by the fighting in eastern Ukraine, part of a larger movement of tens of thousands of people who have fled since pro-Russian militias — some toting heavy caliber machine guns and mortars — took up arms against government troops in March.

Hundreds already have died in the fighting, including all passengers and crew aboard a Malaysia Airlines jet shot down over eastern Ukraine in July by what American and Ukrainian officials say was...

a Russian anti-aircraft missile fired from rebel-controlled territory.

On July 18, two Jews — Svetlana Sitnikov and her daughter, Anna — were killed in an explosion in the eastern city of Lugansk.

The Jewish refugees are surviving on assistance from local and foreign Jewish groups that in recent weeks have launched major rescue and relief operations. The American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee and community officials are helping to provide housing, monthly stipends, food and medicine in what they describe as one of largest mobilizations in the history of Ukrainian Jewry.

“We’re talking about a multi-element package designed to improve the situation of each and every person who left the battle zone,” said Yoni Leifer, the head of operations in the Dnepropetrovsk region for JDC. A separate relief operation is being carried out by the Chabad-led Jewish community of Dnepropetrovsk.

The Lazaurenkos decided to leave Slavyansk in June after government forces began engaging the separatists. But Ludmila Lazaurenko does not blame Ukrainian troops, who launched their offensive following the standoff with the rebels.

“We were pro-Russian,” Lazaurenko said of herself and her parents, Nadezhdha and Alexander Belovol, who fled with her and Anatoly. “But that changed after we saw how they fought from inside the houses of civilians, with no regard for their lives. There is no excuse for that.”

Two weeks after the family left, they learned from a television news broadcast that their house had been blown up.

“We started crying when we saw that nothing was left,” Lazaurenko said.

“We have nothing now.”

For those without relatives to take them in, JDC and the Jewish community of Dnepropetrovsk have arranged rooms in the community’s various institutions. The Beit Baruch old age home recently reached its capacity after 28 people were given spots in vacant rooms.

Among them are Rosa Dvoskina and Sofia Sanina, two women in their 80’s who fled Slavyansk and Lugansk, respectively, in early July.

“I made it out, but I can’t stop thinking about my poor friends and neighbors who are still trapped there without water or medicines in a place full of death,” said a weeping Dvoskina, who had lived in her apartment building for 40 years before having to leave.

Like most refugees, Dvoskina and Sanina say they fled out of a general concern for safety unrelated to the fact that they are Jewish. But their neighbors at Beit Baruch, an Orthodox family of seven from Donetsk who requested not to be named, said anti-Jewish graffiti began to appear in the city as the rule of law weakened.

“We started seeing swastikas painted on park benches, buildings,” the family’s grandfather said.

Amid lingering uncertainty about the future of Ukraine’s embattled eastern border cities, Dvoskina and Sanina are thinking about immigrating to Israel, though they would prefer to return to their homes. Other refugees, including Elena Libina from Donetsk, are determined to leave permanently for Israel.

Libina is staying in a community facility in Dnepropetrovsk only until her immigration application is approved. Meanwhile, the Jewish community is arranging for the rescue of her 91-year-old aunt, who remains trapped in Lugansk.

“We felt the tension rising and noticed that bus tickets out of the city were increasingly becoming more expensive,” Libina told JTA. “When they bombed the administration building, I left.”

Dnepropetrovsk is one of Ukraine’s largest Jewish communities, with 50,000 members. Several oligarchs, including the banking magnate Igor Kolomoisky, have poured millions into the community’s institutions, including several Jewish schools and the $100 million Menorah Jewish Community Center, a 450,000 square-foot facility that includes luxury mikvah baths, kosher restaurants, a Holocaust museum and a day care center.

Zelig Brez, the community’s director general and right hand of the city’s influential chief rabbi, Shmuel Kamenetsky, said organizing the rescue and relief operation isn’t merely a religious duty but part of his responsibility toward Ukraine’s smaller Jewish communities.

“It comes with the territory of being an engine of Jewish life in Ukraine,” Brez said.

The community has made wide use of its facilities to help house the refugees. Elena Konigina and her 12-year-old daughter, Ksenia, have stayed at a scenic countryside resort near the Dnepropetrovsk suburb of Pavlograd since they fled Lugansk in May.

Konigina would like to immigrate to Israel, but Ksenia is a minor and cannot exit the country without the consent of both parents. Konigina says she does not know how to reach Ksenia’s father, whom she divorced several years ago.

Even if she could go, Konigina worries that the situation in the Jewish state won’t be much better.

“I don’t know what good that will do,” Konigina said. “They are shooting there, too.”

government has a deep antipathy toward the Islamist
Hamas movement.

Israel had previously embraced an Egyptian cease-fire proposal that was rejected by Hamas, which saw its terms as decidedly unfriendly.

Tamara Cofman Wittes,
a deputy assistant secretary
of state for the Middle East
in Obama’s first term, said that Turkey and Qatar are necessary interlocutors because Hamas needs credible representatives of its interests in the negotiating process and because the two countries are not tempted to support Hamas involvement.

A deputy assistant secretary
of state for the Middle East
in Obama’s first term, Wittes, said Hamas needs credible representatives of its
interests in the negotiating
process and because the two countries are not tempted to
support Hamas involvement.

In comments to the Israeli press by unnamed Israeli officials, Kerry was depicted as a hapless bumbler who, however unwittingly, seemed to be negotiating on behalf of Hamas.

U.S. officials told Israeli leaders to tone down the attacks on Kerry, saying such broadsides undermined Israel’s ability to face down its true enemy, Hamas.

“I understand there are disagreements between the United States and Israel, and maybe the secretary of state and Israel,” he said.
“But those disagreements do not justify the ugly name calling. It undermines the relationship of the only true ally Israel has. In times of disagreement, one needs to embrace our friends.”

The exact nature of Kerry’s cease-fire proposal and how it came to be rejected by Israel’s Security Cabinet is not clear. But it is clear that the Security Cabinet’s eight ministers believed that it was tilted toward Hamas.

In a briefing for Israeli reporters, a senior American official is said to have argued that the document the Cabinet reviewed was simply one including the latest ideas for consideration and not a final draft.

Israeli officials, speaking anonymously to the Israeli media, have said they understood it as a final draft and that, in any case, even being asked to consider such a document was deeply unsettling.

Israelis say they were offended by the document’s detailed emphasis on what would be seen as wins for Hamas: Talks on opening borders and transfer of emergency funds to pay the salaries of employees in Gaza who had worked for the Hamas-led government and now are supposed to be incorporated into the PA.

Israel’s concerns, including the removal of rockets and missiles from Gaza and the destruction of a tunnel network that reaches inside Israel, were confined in the document to three words:
“address security issues.”

There were also concerns, shared by Egypt, the Palestinian Authority and Western European countries, that the proposal would strengthen Hamas at the expense of the P.A.

On July 27, President Obama called for an “immediate, unconditional humanitarian ceasefire” in a phone call with Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, according to a White House readout describing the phone call.

The readout nodded to Israeli concerns by reaffirming U.S. support for Egypt’s cease-fire efforts, while also stressing that Obama’s cease-fire call was building on Kerry’s efforts.

The readout also emphasized the importance of addressing Gaza’s economic plight, something that Hamas has made into a key precondition for a cease-fire.

“The President underscored the enduring importance of ensuring Israel’s security, protecting civilians, alleviating Gaza’s humanitarian crisis, and enacting a sustainable ceasefire that both allows Palestinians in Gaza to lead normal lives and addresses Gaza’s long-term development and economic needs, while strengthening the Palestinian Authority,” the readout said. “The President stressed the U.S. view that, ultimately, any lasting solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict must ensure the disarmament of terrorist groups and the demilitarization of Gaza.”

France bans pro-Palestinian demonstrations after violence

(JNS.org)

France is banning pro-Palestinian demonstrations in some parts of the country, after anti-Israel rioters attacked two Paris synagogues as part of a larger violent protest in the city’s Bastille Square against Israel’s ongoing Operation Protective Edge.

A group of the rioters tried to break into the Don Isaac Abravanel synagogue in eastern Paris wielding chairs and bats on July 13. Another synagogue on Rue de la Roquette in Paris was attacked by rioters hurling stones.

“I cannot accept a repetition of these incidents and I cannot take the risk of seeing French citizens, whatever their religious affiliations, exposed to violence,” said
French Interior Minister
Bernard Cazeneuve, reported
France 24.

“The Jewish population is worried because they are finding themselves cornered on the one hand by the right (the extreme right) which is gaining electoral support, and is still anti-Semitic in its ideology and in its ranks; and on the other hand, by pro-Palestinian forces, the extreme left, disaffected youth from suburban housing projects, and the Muslim population in general,” renowned Nazi hunter Serge Klarsfeld said, according to ABC News.
