Colonel Richard Kemp has spent most of his life combating terrorism and insurgency. In his 30-year military career he commanded British troops on the front line in some of the world's toughest hot spots. He was wounded while fighting terrorists in Northern Ireland. In 2013 it emerged that he had been named as a target on Al Qaida's death list.

In 2018, Kemp was once again on the front line during Hamas's series of violent terrorist operations intended to breach the border from Gaza into Israel. In May, he addressed the UN Human Rights Council, refuting their allegations that the IDF had acted disproportionately and accused the Council of encouraging terrorism by their failure to recognise that Hamas was responsible for the violence.
