LASTING LEGACIES

Israel Dombrow

The list of designated funds whose income will help to provide for the future of our community is growing, slowly but surely. And as one looks over the names on those funds, they are not always familiar. Some of the funds are named for people gone for a long time, whose friends and family are mostly no longer here, either. And then there are some like the Israel Dombrow Fund for Jewish Children, named for people who never lived in Savannah, and we wonder, what is the connection?

Israel Dombrow lived his entire life in Birmingham, Alabama. His sister, Sarah, married Elliot Gottlieb of Savannah (and Gottlieb's Bakery) and raised a family here; her children stayed in Savannah and some of her grandchildren and great-grandchildren live here today. Israel remained in Birmingham where he was one of the owners of Standard Furniture Company, operators of a chain of furniture stores. He never married and had no children. He became the caretaker for his widowed mother and after her death, lived a modest life in a small apartment.

Dombrow's niece, Arlene (Gottlieb) Jaffie, described him as someone who "never wanted anything for himself." She said, "He was a wonderful, wonderful philanthropist. He had no family left in Birmingham. When he died, with this fund he wanted to leave something in Savannah that his great and grand nieces and nephews could see that he had done."

Shortly after Israel Dombrow's death in January 2010, Arlene and her brother, Isser Gottlieb z"l, established the Israel Dombrow Fund for Jewish Children at the Jewish Community Foundation of Savannah. The fund's income is used to provide assistance for Jewish children to partake in camping, after school or sports programs sponsored or provided by the Jewish Educational Alliance.

"My uncle wanted his nieces and nephews to know that he cared about them and their future in Savannah," said Arlene.
