

Ten Things Your Congregation Can Do to Reduce the Stigma Surrounding Mental Illness

1. Publish or write a newsletter article on mental illness
2. Encourage and support members of your community, who are willing to come forward and share their story with others
3. Respond openly to mental illnesses; recognize the ongoing stress and sense of loss experienced by families of those with mental illnesses; offer support, concern and frequent respite.
4. Keep in touch with a person who is temporarily institutionalized.
5. Become informed: stay alert to news about developments in research and care; identify local agencies that provide information and services in order to have it at hand when needed.
6. Look carefully at the expressions of basic theology so as not to blame or perpetuate the concept of sin, guilt and lack of faith as reasons for mental illness.
7. Recognize the role of established faith communities and clergy as opinion setters; educate to dispel myths and allay people's fears.
8. Collaborate in consciousness-raising with other faiths, social service agencies, and consumer organizations.
9. Organize active outreach to mentally ill persons and their families through a proper congregational committee (Bikkur Cholim)
10. Provide space for support groups to meet.

(Adapted from Our Congregation as a Caring Community: Paint a Different Picture of Mental Illness by Rabbi Jeffrey Cohen, D. Min., FCOC, AMHA. Available through Pathways to Promise)